KUSHNER MET WITH RUSSIAN BANK

1 A Russian bank under U.S. economic sanctions over Russia's incursion into Ukraine disclosed that its executives had met Jared Kushner, President Donald Trump's son-in-law and a top White House adviser, during the 2016 election campaign. Kushner has agreed to testify to a Senate committee investigating whether Russia tried to interfere in the election. Allegations by U.S. intelligence agencies that Russian actors were behind hacking of senior Democratic Party operatives and spreading disinformation linger over Trump's young presidency. Democrats charge the Russians wanted to tilt the election toward the Republican, a claim dismissed by Trump. Russia denies the allegations. REUTERS

UNITED AIRLINES BARS TEEN GIRLS IN LEGGINGS

2 Two teenage girls wearing leggings were barred from boarding a United Airlines flight on Sunday because they did not meet a dress code for special pass travelers, a company spokesman said amid a furor on social media. The two girls, who were traveling with a companion, would not have been turned away for wearing leggings had they been paying customers, United spokesman Jonathan Guerin said as the airline responded to the backlash. "[The two girls] were instructed that they couldn't board until they corrected their outfit. They were fine with it and completely understood," Guerin said, adding that all three passengers missed the flight. He did not know if they had boarded a later plane or made alternate travel arrangements. The three passengers did not complain about their treatment. REUTERS

NETANYAHU TO WORK WITH TRUMP ON PEACE

3 Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said he was committed to working with President Donald Trump to advance peace efforts with the Palestinians and with the broader Arab world. Netanyahu made the pledge in a speech to the largest U.S. pro-Israel lobbying group at a time when the Trump administration is seeking agreement with his right-wing government on limiting settlement construction on land the Palestinians want for a state, part of a U.S. bid to resume long-stalled peace negotiations. But Netanyahu, speaking via satellite link from Jerusalem, avoided any mention of the delicate discussions, and stopped short of reiterating a commitment to a two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. JAPAN AVALANCHE KILLS SEVEN STUDENTS

4 An avalanche in central Japan killed seven high school students and a teacher who were among a group of almost 50 on mountain climbing training, police said. The avalanche swept down the hillside at around 8.30 a.m. near a ski slope in Nasu, 100 miles north of Tokyo, where 40 high school students, accompanied by eight teachers, were climbing, a local government official said. Thirty-eight of the group were injured and two were in critical condition, the official said, adding that there had been no fatal avalanches in the region for at least three years. "We have avalanche incidents once or twice a year around here, but haven't had anything this big," a fire department official said. An avalanche warning from a local meteorological observatory was in place for the area at the time of the accident. REUTER

Mission to Mosul: NYC Medics saves lives

The medical team attempts to stop the bleeding on an Iraqi soldier shot by an ISIS sniper. PHIL SUAREZ

The humanitarian aid group was founded in 2005 by two New York paramedics, and has had 250 volunteers.

AMY RUSSO
letters@metro.us

Phil Suarez knows trauma. He's seen it up close as a paramedic for more than 20 years in New York City, responding to calls in the Bronx, Washington Heights and Hell's Kitchen. But that experience still couldn't prepare him for what he encountered during a recent mission to Mosul, the ravaged city in Iraq that government and coalition forces are trying to reclaim from Islamic State.

Suarez is co-founder of NYC Medics, a humanitarian aid group partnered with the World Health Organization to provide global disaster relief. While the organization and its volunteers have been helping around the world for more than a decade, this is the first year it has set up inside a war zone.

NYC Medics' mission in Mosul began in February when the World Health Organization recognized that the number of casualties was certain to mount as the fighting to retake the city intensified.

In his three weeks there ending in early March, Suarez treated dozens of wounded civilians and soldiers. Two children stand out in particular, one was a 4-year-old girl believed to have been shot by an ISIS fighter, and another was a young boy who suffered gunshot wounds to his abdomen.

"The innocents are always the most difficult thing to digest," Suarez, 46, said last week. "They're noncombatants. They're victims and it's just hard to process who, what kind of individual, what do they tell themselves justifies such barbaric behavior to be able to hurt an innocent person."

But Suarez said he had to treat the wounds and move on, because there were more injured every day.

"We just wouldn't last long in the industry if you took this stuff to heart and you really weren't able to process it. So, I think we have an incredible resilience to be able to bury these things deep into our souls that allows us to go back day after day and keep doing the work."

While the work is grueling, co-founder Steve Muth, who was also a New York City paramedic, said that his years serving the culturally diverse communities of New York prepared him to work abroad, where he met a range of people in need.

NYC Medics began in 2005 when 13 paramedics from the city responded to the Kashmir earthquake in South Asia that killed 75,000 people and left tens of thousands more injured.

From that one emergency response, an organization was born, Muth said. "I don't think any of us thought that we would be successful, but that wasn't really the question," he said. "The question was, are you willing to try?"

Now in its 12th year, NYC Medics has had 250 volunteers who have operated in 11 countries. But Mosul is different. There aren't many aid organizations willing to travel there because of the danger, despite the desperate need for medical professionals.

"That's what gets you, actually. It's tragedy," Muth said. "It's nothing else. It's not the blood, it's not anything like that. Tragedy is what weighs on you, and you see a lot of it."

The operation in Mosul sees a week's worth of trauma at an ordinary hospital in one hour, said Tim Tan, NYC Medics medical director. "I think all of us working in health care, working in ERs, we're used to seeing a certain level of chaos and trauma," he said. "This is obviously at a whole other level. It's a war zone. It's just that much more intense."

'Religious left' emerging as political force in Trump era

A surge of congregations offering to provide sanctuary to immigrants seeking asylum is one example of religious activism.

Since President Donald Trump's election, monthly lectures on social justice at the 600-seat Gothic chapel of Union Theological Seminary have been filled to capacity with crowds three times what they usually draw.

In January, the 181-year-old Upper Manhattan graduate school, whose architecture evokes London's Westminster Abbey, turned away about 1,000 people from a lecture on mass incarceration. In the nine years that the Rev. Serene Jones has served as its president, she has never seen such crowds.

"The election of Trump has been a clarion call to progressives in the Protestant and Catholic churches in America to move out of a place of primarily professing progressive policies to really taking action," she said.

Although not as powerful as the religious right, which has been credited with helping elect Republican presidents and boasts well-known leaders such as Christian Broadcasting Network founder Pat Robertson, the "religious left" is now slowly coming together as a force in politics.

This disparate group, traditionally seen as lacking clout, has been propelled into political activism by Trump's policies on immigration, health care and social welfare, according to clergy members, activists and academics. A key test will be how well it will be able to translate its mobilization into votes in the 2018 midterm congressional elections.

"It's one of the dirty little secrets of American politics that there has been a religious left all along and it just hasn't done a good job of organizing," said J. Patrick Hornbeck II, chairman of the theology department at Fordham University, a Jesuit school in New York.

"It has taken a crisis, or perceived crisis, like Trump's election to cause folks on the religious left to really own their religion in the public square," Hornbeck said.

Religious progressive activism has been part of American history. Religious leaders and their followers played key roles in campaigns to abolish slavery, promote civil rights and end the Vietnam War, among others. The latest upwelling of left-leaning religious activism has accompanied the dawn of the Trump presidency.

Some in the religious left are inspired by Pope Francis, who has been an outspoken critic of anti-immigrant policies and a champion of helping the needy.

Although support for the religious left is difficult to measure, leaders point to several examples, such as a surge of congregations offering to provide sanctuary to immigrants seeking asylum, churches urging Republicans to reconsider repealing the Obamacare health law and calls to preserve federal spending on foreign aid.

The number of churches volunteering to offer sanctuary to asylum seekers doubled to 800 in 45 states after the election, said the Elkhart, Indiana-based Church World Service, a coalition of Christian denominations which helps refugees settle in the United States — and the number of new churches offering help has grown so quickly that the group has lost count.

"The religious community, the religious left is getting out, hitting the streets, taking action, raising their voices," said the Rev. Noel Anderson, its national grass-roots coordinator. REUTERS

Cuba Gooding Jr. is up to no good

During Paleyfest in L.A., Cuba Gooding Jr. took it upon himself to lift Sarah Paulson's dress. Maybe it was some sort of egregiously unfunny joke or just one of those things where men feel like they can do whatever to women without consequences. It's impossible to say!

Anyway, Paulson played it off and laughed about it. But she was the only one — on Twitter, fans were outraged.

"It turns out Cuba Gooding Jr is a d—head who has no respect for women," one fan wrote. "Um.. so is Cuba Gooding Jr allowed to get away with liftin Sarah Paulson's skirt at Paley Center?" another wrote. "Total disrespect to a woman."

The two actors, who starred in "The People vs. O.J. Simpson," and "American Horror Story: Roanoke" together are reportedly good friends, which still isn't exactly an excuse for this behavior.

More importantly, what would Holland Taylor say?! Probably, "Hands off my lady, scum." Probably.

Val Kilmer is still very obsessed with Cate Blanchett

A long time ago — 2006 in fact — actor Val Kilmer gushed about Cate Blanchett in an interview with Elle. He said things like, "I just love Cate Blanchett, and I've lost her number." Creepy!

Now, the 57-year-old is taking his obsession to Twitter. In a series of unprompted tweets, Kilmer elaborated on just how the flawless 47-year-old has changed his life.

"Recently I've had two dreams with Cate Blanchett in them. Her husband wasn't in either of them." Fascinating!

"Once I flew all the way to Australia just to talk to Cate Blanchett. Her husband met me first. Or, instead, I guess, to be accurate." Charming!

"Once I did a cameo just to hang with Cate Blanchett who picked up a shovel in our sc. I was so dazzled by HOW she picked it up I forgot my line." OK!

When someone pointed out how creepy he was being, Kilmer said, "Nothing in the least creepy about loving someone." Yikes!

Val Kilmer is probably most famous for playing Batman that one time. Cate Blanchett has two Academy Awards.

Angelina Jolie's heartwarming tribute

Angelina Jolie has a perfume to shill, and so she is opening up about her mother. And it's actually really heartwarming.

Chatting with Hello! magazine, the actress, director and activist explains why she's now adding "beauty icon" to her impossibly long list of passions.

On choosing to be the face of Guerlain's new fragrance Mon Guerlain, Jolie says "it was a brand my mother loved, and that I knew from my childhood. It spoke to her, as it does to me, of beauty, history and quality." The actress continues, "My mother was a very natural woman."

The 41-year-old rarely talks about her mother, Marcheline Betrand, who died in 2007 after a long battle with ovarian and breast cancers.

Honestly, it's just nice to hear Jolie recalling fond memories of her mother, even if it is in promotion of a product. Keep shilling, girl. I'm here for it.

Benedict Cumberbatch and Sophie Hunter welcome baby boy

There are now at least two young children in the word with the last name Cumberbatch, poor souls. That's right — according to an exclusive from People, Benedict Cumberbatch's wife Sophie Hunter gave birth to a baby boy on March 3. His name? Hal Auden Cumberbatch. That's different! I'm kind of into it.

The couple married in 2015, and already share a son, Christopher "Kit" Carlton, 21 months. Hunter, a director, recently changed her last name to Cumberbatch, formally.

The 40-year-old "Dr. Strange" star has called having a baby "massive … on a very unexpected level," which is chill. Imagine what he would think if he was the one with a baby sitting on his bladder for nine months!

Congratulations to the happy couple.

Phew: Shailene Woodley reaches a plea deal

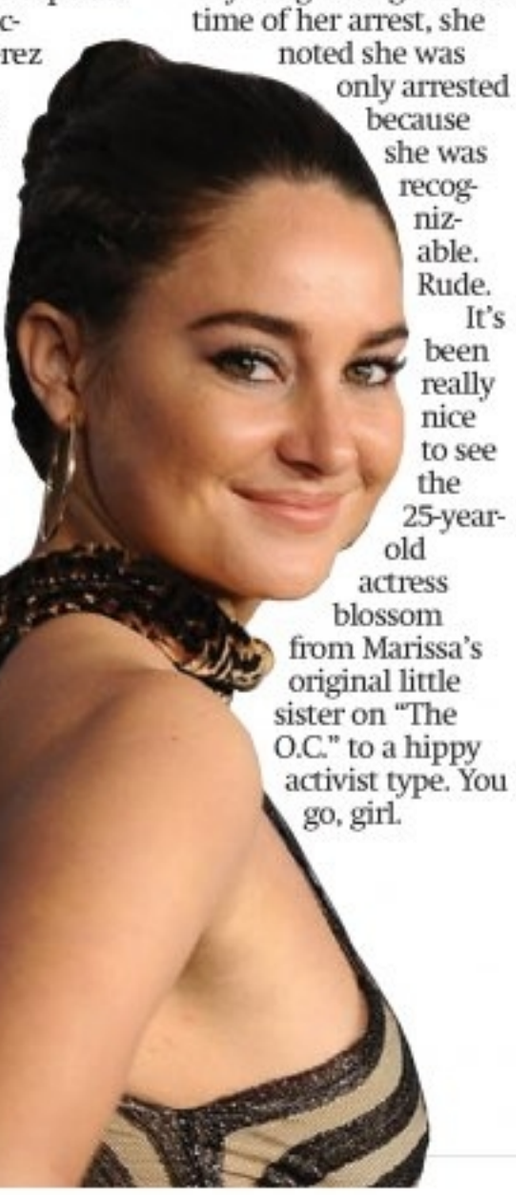
The star of "Big Little Lies" — which, for the record, is not remotely related to "Pretty Little Liars" like I thought it might be — was one of 27 arrested for protests over the Dakota Access Pipeline in October. According to Perez Hilton, she livestreamed her arrest on Facebook. Young people these days, am I right?

Now, the actress has reached a plea deal. According to The Hollywood Reporter, Woodley will plead guilty to misdemeanor disorderly conduct, serve one year of unsupervised probation and forfeit $500 bond. Most importantly, she won't get a lick of jail time. Not bad, considering she didn't actually do anything wrong: At the time of her arrest, she noted she was only arrested because she was recognizable. Rude.



It's been really nice to see the 25-year-old actress blossom from Marissa's original little sister on "The O.C." to a hippy activist type. You go, girl.

Dakota Fanning is still trying new things

For "Brimstone," the longtime actress had to spend most of the movie mute.

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Dakota Fanning plays a frontierswoman in the 19th century who has to fend off a brutal killer (Guy Pearce) in "Brimstone," now in theaters and VOD. MOMENTUM PICTURES

At 23 years old, Dakota Fanning is a Hollywood veteran. She's been acting for 18 years, making her debut in a Tide commercial. She's done blockbusters like "War of the Worlds" and played evil Jane Volturi in the "Twilight" movies. Nowadays she mostly does indies. (She will be in the star-studded "Ocean's Eight," and she's producing and starring in Kirsten Dunst's adaptation of Sylvia Plath's "The Bell Jar.") Even now, so long into her career, she's still finding new things to try.

So it goes in "Brimstone," a brutal, epic Western in which she plays a mute frontierswoman who's mysteriously pursued by a scarred, murderous preacher played by Guy Pearce.

"I knew there were challenges to it that I was excited about," Fanning tells us. "You want to push yourself to do something different. It was a lot of fun to push myself."

The challenges were many: filming in Berlin, Austria and Hungary during the dead of winter. Riding horses up muddy hills. Learning sign language. And playing a character who spends most of the film unable to speak, communicating only with facial reactions.

"That was what I was most excited about," she admits. Over the last handful of years, Fanning has been drawn to quiet, withdrawn characters; see her turns in "The Last of Robin Hood," "Effie Gray" and "Every Secret Thing." (That hasn't always been the case: In "American Pastoral," she had to deal with a severe speech impediment.) To her, dialogue isn't the most interesting part of acting.

GETTY

"In real life we convey more things with our body language and our facial expressions and the vibes we give out," she explains. "That speaks so much louder than the words we're saying. It's not often you get to explore that in movies, but it's such a huge part of communication in general."

Indeed, our chat with Fanning takes place over the phone, meaning I can't see what she's doing. "We might have a completely different conversation if we were in person," she says. "You would be able to see that I talk with my hands a lot. I'm always partly talking to the air with my hands."

One thing that wasn't new for Fanning was doing a period film, which has a unique kind of challenge. It's never fun "when you're wearing a corset; you move differently, you speak differently," she says. "This was my second time wearing one, so I was a little used to it. But the sweet relief of taking it off at the end of the day is never lost on me."

Dakota's got a gun

She also had to use a gun — also not her first time. "I'm not the biggest fan of that, to be honest," Fanning says. "The precautions they have to take on films when there's guns involved, it's serious business. Even though there are blanks in there, blanks can really injure people. When they say 'Cut!' I hand it off. I don't want to have it in my hands for any longer than I have to. I don't look forward to those scenes because they just make me nervous."

Bathing suit shopping? Try an indie designer

Pink mermaid bikini by MessQueen MESSQUEEN NEW YORK

It's getting to be swimsuit season.

KATE MOONEY
@yatinbrooklyn
kate.mooney@metro.us

As of March 21, it's officially spring, and if you stand in the sun with an iced coffee in hand, it even sorta feels like it. Whether you have a tropical getaway planned or a year-round jacuzzi connect, it's getting to be bathing suit shopping time. Instead of combing the racks at Target, or flipping through a J. Crew catalog, why not support an independent designer this year? Here are five independent brands offering creative looks at affordable prices.

Alea Swimwear

Twenty-nine-year-old designer Siobhan Barrett sells her handmade swimsuits via her Etsy shop, Alea Swimwear. The Chico, California, native's feminine, retro cuts — from "monokini" one pieces to halter bikini tops and high-waisted bottoms — are adorned with fanciful patterns, like her 31 Flavors Ice Cream and Lisa Frank Unicorn prints. "Game of Thrones" fans will covet her Sansa Stark silver metallic one-piece. For extra inspiration, check out Barrett's travel writing series #bikiniswithoutborders on aleaswimwear.com, featuring photos and stories from women rocking the Alea brand around the world (FYI, Barrett trades suits for blog posts).
etsy.com/shop/aleaswimwear, prices from $35.

MessQueen New York

Whether you're mermaid crazed or just a sucker for glittery sequins, designer Courtney Gamble, aka MessQueen New York, has hand-crafted creations that will transform you into a finned water goddess. Mix and match the pink mermaid bikini halter top with purple mermaid booty shorts and you'll be a seapunk queen on the boardwalk this summer. We also dig her pineapple print bikini halter top and high-waisted bottoms.
etsy.com/shop/messqueennewyork, prices from $38.

Amara Felice Retro Swim

At this Etsy shop, you can find custom handmade vintage swimsuits from independent designer Amara Felice. Choose between the likes of a pin-up style one piece in peacock feather print, or a black and white polka dot high-waisted bikini. If you need an outfit for your beach blanket companion, Felice repurposes leftover fabric scraps to make sequined mermaid tail-and-top sets for Barbie dolls.
etsy.com/shop/amarafelice-retroswim, from $148.

Kayleigh Connor Design

Fancy a crocheted bikini this season? Designer Kayleigh Connor provides made-to-order, hand-knit suits, complete with adjustable wooden beaded tassels, ideal for beach or poolside sunbathing — and maybe a casual wade out during low tide.
etsy.com/shop/kayleigh-connordesign, from $65.

Fair Harbor Clothing

Dudes, we didn't forget you. In 2015, Jake and Caroline Dehaney, two siblings out of Westchester, New York, and family friend Sam Jacobson formed an eco-friendly men's swimwear brand. Named after Fair Harbor in Fire Island, where they spent summers growing up, their nautical-themed boardshorts — like the palm tree-patterned Navy Dunewood — are made of recycled plastic bottles and available to order online. Here's to cleaner beaches and stylin' swim trunks.

Are you overdoing it in spin class?

Going hard several days a week at spin class might feel great, but improper form, preparation and rest can lead to injuries. ISTOCK

The most common injuries — and how to prevent them.

MEGAN JOHNSON
letters@metro.us

The music is pumping, the sweat pouring down your forehead, and you're dead set on reaching the finish line. Legions of men and women swear by indoor cycling classes, thanks to the calorie-torching intensity and addictive rush of endorphins. But while hitting the bike is often praised for its low impact on joints, it's still quite easy for even seasoned riders to injure themselves during spin class.

"I often see improper form on the bike that could lead to injuries," says Christina Lodde, senior instructor at Flywheel Sports, who cites pain in the knees, hips, lower back and shoulders as common cycling injuries.

In fact, improper bike setup is a surefire way to injure yourself in a cycling class, particularly in the knee area.

"People have a tendency to ride too low," says Emily Southworth, lead instructor at Recycle Studio in Boston. "Your ideal bike setup is when your leg is totally extended, there should be a soft bend in your knee."

Keep your ears open for the cues given by your instructor, says Lodde. Those postural instructions they're shouting out during class aren't just for effect.

"Listening to cues from the instructor, like relaxing your shoulders, keeping your core engaged with your weight back over the seat, and keeping your head in line with your spine, are all important reminders to keep your body safe and your workout effective," says Lodde.

Hip-abductor strengthening exercises. BRONCORE FITNESS

Even if you're not feeling a specific ache or pain, some riders simply need to learn to give themselves a break. (Also, uh, be careful when you're dismounting.) Overexerting oneself to the point of exhaustion is a common yet dangerous habit for cyclers, many of whom live for the feeling of pushing their limits. Doubling up on classes that are specifically designed to last only 45 minutes can be harmful, says Southworth, especially if you're doing it seven days a week.

"If you're doing two classes back to back, you're probably not putting your resistance up as high as you can, which can lead to knee problems," says Southworth, who herself rests one to two days a week. "Your body's going to perform better when you're giving yourself a break."

Fitness professionals outside the world of cycling say they frequently see the hazards of spending too much time on the bike.

"With too much spin, you may start to notice knee pains, quadricep tears and injured hip flexors," says Bron Volney, founder and personal trainer at BronCore Fitness in Boston. "You need to counterbalance your spin workouts with at least one hamstring, glute and [hip] abduction-specific workout during the week."

Volney suggests moves like curtsy lunges and abduction side steps using circle bands. Stand in a slight squat position with your toes pointed forward, and perform reps of 20 in each direction to contrast the sagittal plane of motion (forward and backward) that indoor cycling focuses on.

Both Lodde and Southworth suggest varying one's routine through Pilates, yoga and barre classes. But they say it's being in tune with your own body that can really ensure a safe and effective workout.

"Exercise and the fitness industry has totally blown up and it becomes such a social thing," says Southworth. "But you have to listen to your body, and if you're having any pain, maybe take a couple days off."

No excuse for B's to miss playoffs

The Bruins need to get back on track in a hurry.

Only the Bruins (39-30-6) could transition from safely in the Eastern Conference playoff picture to not in control of their own fate anymore in the matter of a week. But that's exactly what happens when you lose four games in a row (all in regulation) like they did last week.

Boston finally regained a bit of positive momentum over the weekend though as it pulled out a huge 2-1 win at Barclays Center over the Islanders (35-27-12). The win put them back in the second wild card spot. New York came into that matchup technically tied with Boston but ahead on a tiebreaker since it had won the season's first two meetings (both at TD Garden) and also possessed a game in hand.

If you didn't see that one, you'd probably be shocked to know that the two best players in Boston's most vital two points of the season were journeyman forward Riley Nash (two goals in his third career NHL multi-goal performance) and backup goaltender Anton Khudobin (6-5-1) who made 18 saves in his fifth straight victory. Tuukka Rask (33-20-4) was out with a mysterious lower-body injury but he was back at practice on Monday and claimed he'd be able to play the rest of the campaign. For a guy with only 15 points on the season (7 goals, 8 assists), Nash has stepped up at the right time as he had a goal and assist in Thursday's 6-3 loss at the Garden to Tampa Bay (36-29-9). He followed that up with his best outing as a Bruin.

"We got back to playing stingy, especially in the neutral zone denying their speed," explained Bruins center Patrice Bergeron. "They want to get the puck into the zone without having to dump it too many times. We were trying to deny that and limit their speed. We got away from that the last few games and tonight it was good to be back playing the way we want to play: a low-scoring game like we're used to."

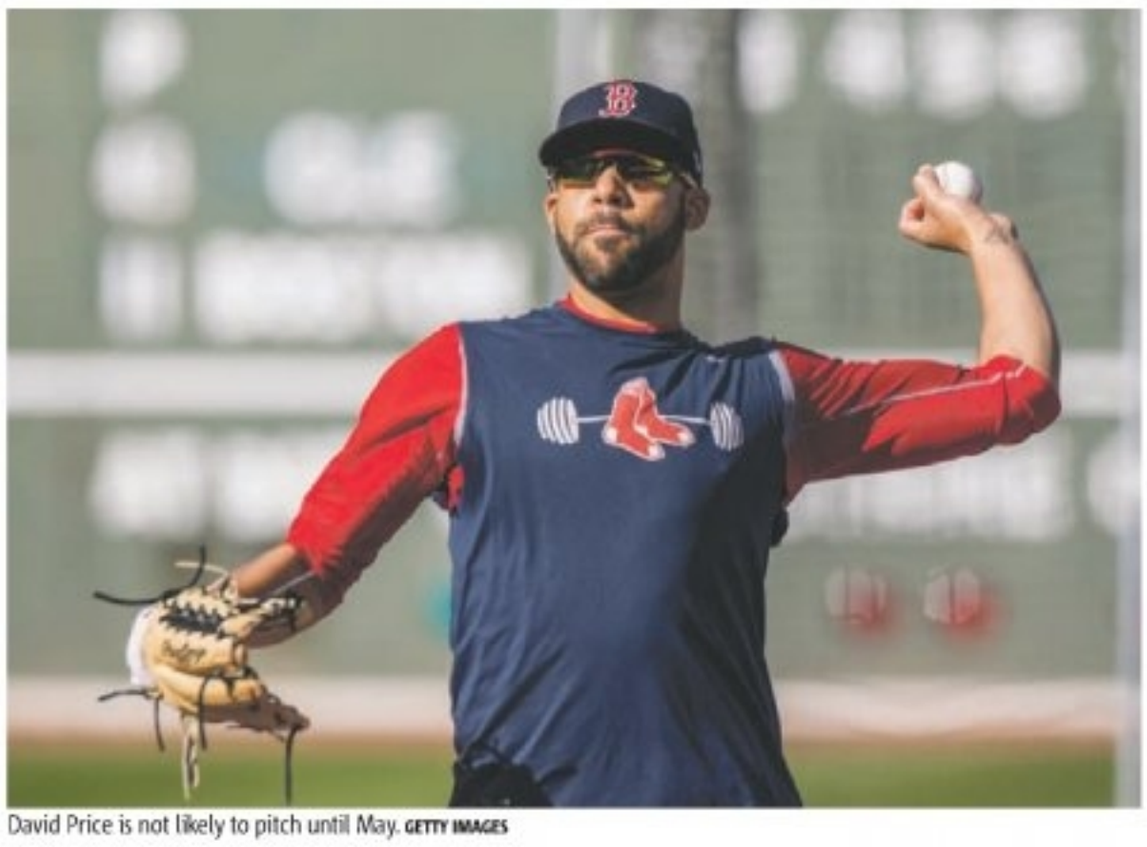
BRAD MARCHAND HAS 80 POINTS IN 2016-17, FOURTH BEST IN NHL.

If the B's should miss the postseason for the third straight spring, the schedule down the stretch will not be a crutch for them to lean on. Of their seven remaining games, they are only away from the Garden once more (this Sunday in Chicago). The six home contests are a mixed bag of contenders (Washington, Nashville and Ottawa), a team hanging on in the playoff race (Tampa Bay) and two playing out the string (Dallas and Florida). Interim head coach Bruce Cassidy (13-7-0 overall since taking over) personally has plenty at stake as well, since he needs to avoid the two most recent late-season collapses of his predecessor — Claude Julien — if he wants to earn that extension that seemed inevitable just a few weeks ago.

Center David Krejci (21 goals, 29 assists) exited practice early on Monday with an upper-body injury but Cassidy said "I believe he'll be fine [Tuesday]." The Bruins host the Predators (38-25-11) on Tuesday (7, NESN) and Nashville is in a somewhat similar position in the Western Conference — hanging onto third-place in the Central Division.



David Price is not likely to pitch until May. GETTY IMAGES

Cold start projected for Red Sox

Whomever came up with the 2017 MLB regular season schedule has likely never been to Boston in early April.

While it's typical for the Red Sox to open their season on the road given that it's still basically winter here, the Sox will be playing real baseball at Fenway starting next Monday. In fact, nine out of the Sox' first 13 games will take place at the old ballpark in the Fens.

Boston will host the Pirates for three games to open the year, then will play at Detroit for four games over that first weekend before returning home to face the Orioles in a two-game set and the Rays in a four-gamer.

It's the first time the Red Sox will open the regular season at home since 2010.

The Price is wrong

David Price will not be available until late April at the absolute earliest due to his elbow injury, but the high-priced lefty was able to play catch this past weekend.

"There was a series of strength tests done in the training room and we felt like he was improved to the point of initiating more throwing," Red Sox manager John Farrell told the AP. "Not off a mound but just to get the arm moving with a ball in flight and will continue in this phase for a period of time. There's not set distance and volume yet to the throws."

With Price out, the Sox' rotation lines up as follows: Rick Porcello, Chris Sale, Steven Wright, Eduardo Rodriguez and Drew Pomeranz.
